

Participants in Pink Show Support

by Blake Borgardt and Caitlin Callahan

Dance team throws powder during their routine photo by Kai Weiler er on the court.

Sophomore Olivia Olson said, "Volleyball brings together girls and creates

The month of October is when everyone brings awareness to breast cancer. Teams across the nation show support by wearing shades of pink to create support for the cause.

The DHS volleyball team had its own fundraiser called "Volley for the Cure." DHS won the game against Kaneland 26-24. The fundraising activities before the game included a bake sale, sold t-shirts, and had a guessing game to figure out how many items were in the jar before heading into the game. This fundraiser helped raise a lot of money with help from the students, parents, and teachers. Even the refs of the game pitched in and wore the t-shirt along with the student section.

When watching the game, our varsity team stayed really tight and did a good job communicating with each othbonds between us that are irreplaceable."

To show its support for the cause, the football team was seen sporting the color pink at their Friday night game.

The Barbs played against two opponents, Ottawa and the weather. Before and during the game, constant rain made it almost impossible to pass the ball. Since the passing had to be kept to a minimum, the Barbs had to focus on running the ball.

The team redeemed itself from its loss against Morris, blowing them out in the Barb's senior night 42-0. They moved up in the state rankings from #39 to #38.

Student Council did very important planning and helped let the students coordinate on the themes. For the breast cancer games, the entire student section was decked out in pink.

From volleyball to football, DHS is getting into the #PinkOut spirit. Make sure you help out and pitch in to support the cause.

Junior Jaylen Hobson sprints towards the end zone photo by Kai Weiler

